FRIENDSHIP BETWEEN CANADA, ISRAEL SOLID

WHY RUSSIA ARMS EGYPT

by George Thayer

Underlying every Soviet arms sale has been the desire to destroy Western influence, particularly in the underdeveloped areas of the world. With nonaligned countries, Moscow will attempt to increase their dependence on Soviet arms; with pro-Western nations, Moscow will first try to neutralize them with a shipment of arms, and once it believes the recipients are nonaligned, it will move to bring them under its domination with even more arms.

To Moscow, Egypt was an inviting target. The British were in the process of withdrawing from their Egyptian bases, thus leaving a vacuum to be exploited. Egypt also controlled the vital bottleneck at Suez. Nasser himself was sufficiently charismatic that he held a large percentage of Arabs in thrall. Controling Egypt, the Soviets knew, would give them considerable leverage in controling other Arab States.

Egypt, at this juncture, was susceptible to Soviet overtures. Nasser was not prepared to accept the arms which both the United States and Great Britain were prepared to give him. He also felt threatened by the formation of Cento.

Furthermore, Nasser favored a show of independence from all forms of Western influence. He had been impressed by the potential strength of the nonaligned countries that had attended the April, 1955, Bandung Conference. He believed that, by accepting arms aid from both power blocs, he could provide the leadership for this third world.

In September, 1955, Nasser announced that his Government had signed a military assistance agreement with the USSR whereby Egypt would receive $200-225 million worth of arms over a two-year period. Repayment was not to be made in cash (in this instance) but in basic commodities and foodstuffs.

Beginning two months earlier, in July, an extremely rapid transfer of arms took place. Egypt received 150 MIG-15s and MIG-17s, 40 Il-28 bombers, 300 T34 heavy tanks, 2 destroyers, 6 submarines and a large quantity of infantry weapons. This equipment severely upset the Middle Eastern balance in arms. Within a year, in November, 1956, war had broken out and the Israelis captured or destroyed approximately one-half of the equipment supplied by the USSR.

MILITARY BUILDUP

It should be noted that it was not the use of Soviet arms that led Israel into the war but their presence. While Great Britain and France had other primary motives for invading Egypt, Israel took part because she was frightened by the large buildup of Egyptian arms.

It also should be noted that, while the Soviet Union welcomed a destabilization in the Middle Eastern arms balance, it did not welcome the war (except in so far as it accidentally helped to obscure Soviet brutality in suppressing the Hungarian Revolution which took place at the same time). The moment the war broke out, the Soviets withdrew their 40 Il-28 bombers from Egypt lest they be used.

Following the Suez crisis, the USSR once again replenished the Egyptian arsenal. The quality of arms also was upgraded. Now Nasser was sold MIG-17s and MIG-19s. W-class submarines, better destroyers and more modern small arms. By 1963 the quality was upgraded one more notch. Egypt received MIG-21 fighters, the best operational jet in the Soviet inventory at the time, TU-16 medium bombers and SA-2 and SA-3 surface-to-air missiles.

The Soviets also had participated earlier in establishing in Egypt an experimental nuclear reactor and in the finahcing of a munitions factory. By June, 1967, the value of all arms sold to Egypt by the Soviets was estimated to be approximately one thousand million dollars.

Soviet arms aid to Egypt was so heavy between the year 1957 and 1967 that it turned Egypt into an arms exporter in her own right. To pay for the MIG-19s and MIG-21s, for instance, Nasser was forced to sell his MIG-17s on the world market. Egyptian aid to various African rebel movements was prompted in many cases less by the USSR's desire to have Cairo act as an intermediary than by Egypt's need to sell its old equipment to pay for the newer arms. Algeria, also a large recipient of Soviet arms, has found itself in a similar position.

The buildup in tensions that eventually exploded in the Six Day War in June, 1967, stemmed largely from Nasser's confidence in his Soviet equipment. Plagued by economic difficulties at home (due in large measure to the heavy cost of weapons), bogged down in a war in the Yemen, and increasingly criticized by his Arab followers for hiding behind the UN truce-keeping force in Gaza, Nasser was eager to reassert himself by leading another attempt at destroying Israel with his Soviet ordinance.

MOSCOW BACKING

With all those arms and the moral backing of Moscow, Nasser saw no need to settle his differences with the Israelis through peaceful negotiations.

If responsibility for the war must be apportioned, part of it would fall on the UN Secretary-General whose inscrutable actions have yet to be fully explained; part would rest with the major Western Powers, who steadfastly refused to act in a forthright manner; part would rest with Nasser and his limited vision. But the bulk of the blame rests with the Soviet Union.

Undeniably this war never would have occurred had there not been a massive infusion of arms into the area.

The Soviets were reportedly displeased with the Egyptian President. Of the 716 aircraft and 1,200 tanks sold to Egypt, the Soviets had seen 356 of the former and approximately 700 of the latter destroyed or captured within a period of 144 hours. All of the Soviet SA-2 Guideline missile batteries located in the Sinai Peninsula were lost, and infantry equipment for 15,000 men was either destroyed or captured. Nor was Moscow too pleased with Syria, which lost over half of its Soviet-built tanks and jet aircraft.

Within a month after the cessation of hostilities the USSR, repeating its actions following the 1956 debacle, began to replenish the depleted stocks of both Egypt and Syria. The value of this equipment has been estimated to be nearly one thousand million dollars.

As of this writing Egypt has more and better arms than before the 1967 war. The percentage of MIG-21s in the Egyptian Air Force, for instance, is 45 percent of the whole, which is a higher proportion than in any Eastern European country except the Soviet Union itself. In return for all this material it is understood that the Soviets demanded and received even more control over its use. How effective this will prove to be is at the moment, debatable.

POLITICS IN ISRAEL: SERIOUS CONFLICTS

Jerusalem.-From afar the news about the opposition of the extreme leftist Mapam Party to the inclusion of Herut in a new Coalition Government may seem infantile, silly, irrelevant. Meir Yaari, the leader of this group—a Marxist organization which years ago spoke of the Soviet Union as the Second Fatherland of the Jewish people—with seven votes in the new Knesset, stated: we will accept the Orthodox demand for a ban on television on the Sabbath in order to include the National Religious Party, provided Begin remains outside the Government.

One must not forget that Mapam—now part of the Labor Alignment—has been the leader of all anti-religious groups in the country. It prides itself on the fact that there are no synagogues in any of its kibbutzim. During the infamous Doctor Trials by Stalin and the subsequent infamous Slansky period in Czechoslovakia it had defended the Second Fatherland.

Recently, because of Moscow's open hostility to Israel, it had to water down its pro-Soviet enthusiasm. Still in its kibbutzim children are taught to revere the Land of the October Revolution; all Soviet crimes against humanity are explained from the point of view of dialectics although they are not excused at this moment—for obvious reasons: Soviet bullets are killing Israeli soldiers every day.

Moshe Dayan opposed the inclusion of Mapam in the Labor Alignment. But he was outvoted by his opponents in the name of a Labor unity which is fiction. For what purpose can there be between the Marxist Mapam and the Labor Party which now is a bourgeois fraternity, dedicated to upholding the present non-Socialist society in Israel and orientated on the "imperialist" United States, Israel's only friend?

Yes, Mapam, despite the continuous tirades against America in the columns of its daily, Al Hamishmar, condescendingly enough accepts funds from the United Jewish Appeal, moneys that help print its outdated, crummy news and Marxist dialectics.

Yet why, in spite of all this, are there important leaders within the Labor Party making an effort to support Mapam's position against Herut?

Now after the elections, in which the Alignment lost about seven seats in Parliament, Herut (Gahal) has become very important.

When the last national Unity of Government had been formed on the eve of the Six Day War, it was the National Religious Party as well as Herut that insisted upon Dayan's becoming Minister of Defense. (There is an affinity between the NRP, Herut and Dayan based on a common view on Israel's present foreign policy: no retreat without direct negotiations.)

Mapam opposes this position because of its ideology. Thus the "doves" in the Cabinet are supporting the Mapam line which is: grant all concessions to the National Religious Party, including the ban on Sabbath television, in order to break the alliance between Mizrachi and Herut.

It should be remembered that Herut will enter the new Cabinet with five cabinet ministers. It demands influential posts; some suggest the foreign ministry to Begin. Thus Yigal Allon and another Cabinet Minister, among others, are supporting discreetly the intransigence of Mapam.

This Cabinet member is not motivated by personal considerations; he requires Mapam support in the Cabinet in order to pursue his policy of compromise. Five Herut Cabinet members, aligned with Moshe Dayan, Shimon Peres and the NRP ministers, would constitute a formidable force against his policies.

However, many doubt if Golda Meir, a statesman who also is a clever politician, would buy such an arrangement. The exclusion of Gahal from the new Government could split the Labor Party. In such a situation, Dayan and Peres might leave the Party taking with them about thirteen loyal MP's. This would finish the parliamentary majority of the Labor alignment.

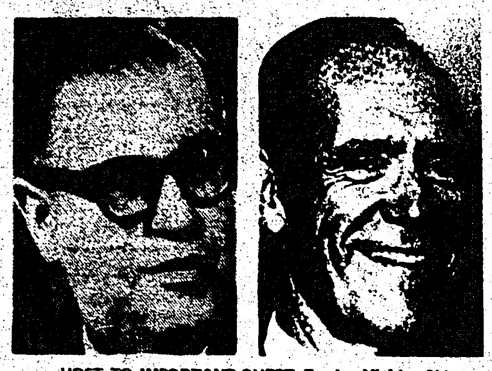
It is my belief that the time has come for the cool heads within the Labor leadership to begin to accept the fact that their power has weakened; they must govern in a coalition with Gahal. The international position of Israel does not permit a return to the Ben Gurion era of political wars.

Hence a compromise will be found. Golda is known for her talents to cut the edges of the sharpest knives. Undoubtedly she will do so again. For she knows what the alternative can be.

Certainly Mapam's presence cannot substitute for Gahal's absence in a new government.



HOST TO IMPORTANT GUEST.-Foreign Minister Abba Eban (left), with the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, Secretary of State for External Affairs, whose current visit to Israel will consolidate even further the friendship between Canada and the Holy Land.

First Canadian in high office to visit Holy Land deeply moved

by M. J. Nurenberger

Lydda Airport.-The Hon. Mitchell Sharp, Secretary of State for External Affairs, told the Israelis Tuesday evening upon his arrival on his Middle East mission that "we in Canada are particularly conscious of Israel because of the strong links which are maintained through private organizations and individual contact between the Jewish people in our two countries."

In his statement, the Canadian Foreign Minister sounded almost like an envoy of the Jewish community, so warm and moving were his words as he stood upon the ground of the Holy Land.

HAPPY TO BE IN ISRAEL

He told the editor of The Canadian Jewish News: "I am profoundly happy at the opportunity to be here."

When I asked Abba Eban today about the meaning of Mr. Sharp's visit, he said, "This is the first visit of a Canadian Foreign Minister in office to Israel, and it is deeply appreciated in Israel."

LOOKED FORWARD TO TRIP

"I have long looked forward to visiting Israel. Coming here affords me deep personal pleasure over and above the satisfaction I derive from speaking now as Canada's Minister for External Affairs. The State of Israel and its people enjoy a special place in the hearts of Canadians. The Government and people of Canada supported the creation of Israel two decades ago; in the intervening years we have watched with warm admiration the consolidation of your nationhood.

"We in Canada are particularly conscious of Israel because of this strong link we maintain through private organizations and individual contact between the Jewish people in our two countries. Because of the creative role the Jewish community has played in the developments of the country, I appreciate the vitality and national enthusiasm which has characterized the development of the State of Israel. I look forward to having useful talks during my visit with my host, Abba Eban, whose visit to Canada I recall with great pleasure. I also look forward to meeting your Prime Minister and other members of your Government."

CANADA CONCERNED ABOUT ISRAEL

"The Canadian Government is deeply concerned about the continuing tension in this region of the world, and I shall be most interested to hear the views of the Government of Israel on how matters stand. In addition, I shall take advantage of my visit to see something of my country and the people of Israel. I am sure it will be an informative experience."

Mr. Sharp also said he expects there will be more trade between Canada and Israel.

While here he will confer with Prime Minister Golda Meir and President Zalman Shazar.

Secretary of State Sharp was greeted at the airport by: Foreign Minister Abba Eban; Mr. McGaughey, the Canadian Ambassador to Israel; Mr. Ephraim Evron, Israeli Ambassador to Canada; members of the diplomatic corps.

Mr. Sharp is going from Israel to Cairo.

DOLES OUT PUNISHMENT FOR AIDING TERRORISTS

Tel Aviv (JCNS).- In the wake of increasing acts of terror, Israel has begun imposing stricter punishment on those giving aid and comfort to Arab terrorists. Last Tuesday she expeled across the River Jordan three village headmen of the Beduin Taamra tribe living near Jerusalem. They were suspected of active aid to, or at least passive acquiescence in, sabotage activity in the Jerusalem area, particularly the Katyusha rocket attacks on the city three months ago.

Recent measures, following the dynamiting of 18 dwellings in Halhul, have included the closure of several schools in Nablus, Jenin and Ramallah, which had served as centers for agitation, and the confiscation of a number of shops in Hebron, near the site of an unsuccessful attack on an army patrol.

Explaining these stricter punishments, a senior officer stated that they were designed to counteract increasing active or passive support for the terrorists; he denied reports that officials had threatened the population of Hebron with deportation should terror continue.

Meanwhile Sheikh Mohammed el Jabari, the Mayor of Hebron - a notable who has shown greater acceptance than any other of cooperation with the military authorities - said in an interview recently in the semi-official daily, Davar, that hard punishment of the inhabitants of Hebron would promote the terrorist cause.

He complained that the town had lost about $537,000 because of the recent restrictions which had prevented the marketing of the area's grape crop.

As a result of past measures, he declared, Hebron people lived in constant fear of new punishments.

Sheikh Jabari reiterated his statement that the local inhabitants had not been involved in terrorist outrages which, he claimed, were the deeds of strangers. The Israeli Army should defend the population, not punish it.

The Mayor compared Hebron with Lebanon - its unarmed population was not capable of curbing terrorist activities however strongly it desired peace and calm, he said.

Attackers of plane on trial soon

Geneva (JCNS).- The three Arabs (including a woman) accused of attacking an El Al airliner at Zurich's Kloten airport on February 18th and held in custody by the Swiss since then will go on trial in Winterhur on November 27th or December 1st.

They will be charged with murder since the El Al trainee pilot in the attacked aircraft died from bullet wounds soon afterwards. Additional charges include endangering human lives with explosives, violating Swiss territorial sovereignty, illegal possession of weapons and damage to property.

At the same time, Mordecai Rahamim, an Israeli security guard, also will go on trial, charged with murder in extenuating circumstances. When the aircraft was fired on, Rahamim fired back at the attackers, killing a man identified as an Arab.

Like the Arabs soon to face trial, Rahamim was detained by the Swiss authorities but later was allowed to leave Switzerland after the Israeli Government had given a guarantee he would return to stand trial when ordered to do so by Berne.

Also like the Arabs, Rahamim had until Monday of this week to file his plea, and he has pleaded "Not Guilty." The three Arabs, however, have remained silent.

If Rahamim is convicted, he could face a sentence of up to ten years' detention. The Arabs face heavier sentences. They are: Aminah Dahbour, 23; Yussuf Tewfik, 34; Mohammed Abu el-Helga, 25. The Arab who was killed was Abdel Hassan, 32. Rahamim is 23.

Bride sues groom for standup

Tel Aviv.- A wouldbe bride last week requested an injunction against a new immigrant who lived in her parents' home for five months and then stood her up on their wedding day, in order to prevent the respondent from leaving the country.

The District Court acceded to her request, after she told the judge that she planned to file a $3,500 suit against the man, for the mental anguish and humiliation caused her by his disappearance at the critical moment - when all the guests were gathered around the wedding canopy. She is also demanding the return of $150 in expenses for the time he lived at her house.

The reluctant groom has not been found.

REST UNDISTURBED

Duesseldorf (JCNS).- The dead of Bergen-Belsen concentration camp in Germany, will not be disturbed after all. There will be no exhumation of the mass graves where over 100,000 martyrs lie buried.

1969 HEARNE MEDALLION
Issued by The Sherritt Mint to Commemorate the Bicentennial of the First Canadian Overland Expedition to the Arctic Ocean

An Inspiring Keepsake with Real Value

There's perhaps nothing better than a coin for symbolizing the values men live by because a coin has value in itself. Although this medallion is not an actual coin, it looks like a coin and feels like a coin. It's made in a popular coin size from metals used for coins: pure nickel, sterling silver and 24 kt. gold. Therefore, it has real value now. And because only a limited number will be issued this year, its value as a collector's item should increase with time.

Of Special Meaning to Families Who Have Come Here from Afar

This medallion represents the pioneering spirit that makes Canada a great land. It pictures an early Canadian explorer, Samuel Hearne. He was among the first of thousands of pioneering Canadians who have come here from many foreign shores to adopt and love this land as their very own. You, your father or your father's father may have come here from another country to live and work among free men. If so, the Hearne medallion has added meaning for you.

A Fine Piece of Medallic Art

This mint was set up by Sherritt Gordon Mines Limited to make coins for overseas countries not having a mint of their own. Therefore, the same methods and the same equipment used for making actual coins have been used in minting these medallions.

The sculptured portrayal of Hearne is, therefore, faithfully reproduced as a striking example of medallic art. It will be treasured as an heirloom for years to come.

Great for Chanukah Giving

Hearne Medallions make wonderful Chanukah gifts . . . to youngsters, collectors and patriotic Canadians. They're available in three different metals (nickel, silver, gold) to fit your gift budget. Both nickel and silver medallions are encased in transparent plastic packets. The gold medallion comes in a deluxe gift box with a free nickel medallion included. Packed with each order is a 1200-word summary of Samuel Hearne's famous journey.

About Samuel Hearne and His Mission
A story that speaks to all people who have ventured into a new land

Two Hundred Years Ago, Samuel Hearne set out from Fort Prince of Wales on Hudson Bay to investigate the report of a rich copper mine near the Arctic Ocean. He also wanted to interest the Indians of Northern Canada in trading with the Hudson's Bay Company and see if there was a North-West passage to the Pacific Ocean.

At the start of this expedition, Hearne was 24. Born in London, he was fatherless at 3 and sent to sea as an apprentice at 11. After a dozen years aboard ship, he became bored and sought a greater challenge in Canada. The local Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company obliged and Hearne was given his mission . . . a mission which became an ordeal.

After trying and failing twice, Hearne achieved his goals on the third attempt. It took over two years. His story is marked by hardship, bloodshed, hunger, cold, and bitter frustration. But it is a story of courage, perseverance, struggle and eventual success. It is a story that exemplifies the kind of pioneering spirit that makes Canada great. Thousands upon thousands of people have come here from foreign shores to develop this land as a land in which they could live and work together as individuals and free men.

Canada has become a blend of peoples and of cultures. Each has added to the whole and gained much in return. Hearne's story reminds us of the fact.

CAMPAIGN MEETING SUCCESSFUL

SCHOOL CAPITAL BUILDING DRIVE REACHES MILLION DOLLAR MARK

The Capital Building Campaign of the Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto has reached the million dollar mark, it was reported at a campaign dinner meeting recently by Joseph Levine, president of Associated, in the unavoidable absence of the campaign chairman, Oscar Shainhouse.

Campaign officers pointed out that the month of November is a crucial period for the success of the campaign.

Officers and campaign workers applauded the appearance of Mark Shapiro, one of the young graduates of the Senior Day High School, who, speaking on behalf of the youth, stressed the importance of the campaign objectives. Campaign workers also had an opportunity to visit the art exhibit being displayed by the PTA of the Day School. (Mrs. B. Marion Levinter is Arts Committee chairman).

The current Building Campaign of Associated, approved by the United Jewish Welfare Fund, was undertaken to raise funds for the erection of a school building at Finch and Bathurst. The building is urgently needed to provide educational facilities for the growing Jewish population in the area. The new school also will help alleviate congestion and overflow enrolment at the main school on Bathurst St. Various locations are currently rented at considerable cost to take care of the overflow. Because of mounting costs, the million dollars raised to date in the campaign represents approximately sixty percent of the amount required.

SEEKS ELECTION.-John Booth, North York senior alderman, who hopes to become elected as a member of the North York Board of Control and make the Metropolitan Toronto Council.

BE QUICK! THEY'RE WAITING FOR ME

ASK THE RABBI
JCNS featurette

Q. What does the rabbi think of our permissive society, and in particular of the shocking exhibitions of pornography currently shown on television and the theatre?

A. As Judaism sees it, to have lustful thoughts is sinful. Salaciousness is opposed to the idea of the holy. The literature of smut, in the words of a Chasidic teacher, "drives away the shechina."

A favourite text of Jewish preachers in this connection, given a far wider application than its immediate context, is: "Since the Lord your God moves about in your camp to protect you and to deliver your enemies to you, let your camp be holy; let Him not find anything unseemly among you and turn away from you" (Deuteronomy 23, 15). A Talmudic saying (Ketubot 8a) is: "Said R. Hanan, son of Rab: Everyone knows why the bride is brought into the bridal chamber. But if anyone engages in lascivious talk, even though seventy years of happiness had been decreed unto him it will be turned for him into evil."

But, purely as a personal opinion, I would subscribe neither to the wholesale condemnation of the "permissive society" nor to the suggestion that a more rigid censorship be exercised, both of which are presumably implicit in the question. Not all plays, films and books which display or describe sexual activities in frank terms are pornographic. Some of them no doubt incite to the illicit and pander to the baser human emotions. But many of them have a strong moral purpose in depicting the degradations of vice.

As for censorship, its dangers were pointed out long ago by Milton and others. Free men should exercise a voluntary censorship of the things they read and see. Judaism encourages a special strictness in these matters, but this is a very different thing from creating censorship laws to interfere with the free choice of other men. Once censorship is given its head on the grounds of harm to society experience shows that it does not stop there but ends by some men imposing their ideas on others.

Jewish books have so frequently been censored or destroyed throughout history that it seems to me to be extremely improper for a Jew to be an advocate of censorship. I would argue this even though (or, perhaps, precisely because) Jews in the past have been guilty of burning the books of other Jews with whose opinions they happened to disagree.

To live in the modern world involves risks but few of us wish to opt out of it.

AL FATAH IN CANADA

WHAT NEXT?

JEWS IN THE USSR

Waiting for a miracle

(In an interview last week with the JCNS & CJN, Anatol Kuznetsov charged the Soviet regime with carrying through a deliberate policy of oppression against its Jewish minority. Here, a young Jewish visitor back from a recent wide ranging tour of Russia, describes the reality of Jewish life in the U.S.S.R. today).

Part of the wooden barricade put up by the Soviet authorities in the courtyard of the Leningrad synagogue

Having moved among them in Moscow, Baku and Leningrad for three weeks, it is impossible to write about the plight of Soviet Jews in understatements. Their problems are too real, whether they be those of young Jews dropped from educational institutions because they are seen entering synagogues, or religious Jews deprived of prayer books and kosher meat, or of Jewish families in Moscow and Leningrad required to bury each of their dead between two non-Jews, because the authorities refuse to make available land for a Jewish cemetery.

The JCNS has published reports of Simhat Torah in Moscow, but until you have experienced it for yourself, it is impossible to convey the impact of that massed gathering of thousands of young Jews, repeating time and again the three or four Hebrew songs with which all they are familiar long into the night, their dancing here and there, encouraged by elderly Jews playing tape-recorded music to them.

Or the overwhelming experience - dreamlike when contemplated from the distance of London - of being hemmed in by hundreds of young Jews pressing you with questions about your life in England ("You mean you can actually walk into a shop and buy a Magen David like that?"), about Jewish life abroad and, above all else, about what life is like in Israel.

"Jew" is stamped accusingly on their identification papers and their Jewish identity is thrown around them like a barricade preventing their forward progress in trade or profession, so Israel has become the obsessive dream of many young people with whom I and my companion were able to speak during our Soviet visit.

They are surprisingly well informed about Israel. The parties, policies and personalities involved in last week's general election are as well known to them as to us here.

Many know Hebrew, teaching it one to another, exchanging new words. They learn their geography of Israel from coveted picture postcards (one young man confided that he had made slides of these postcards and operated a lending library for his friends).

Every facet of Israeli life interested them. Time and again, I was pressed for such information as the cost of a refrigerator in Israel or the price of a bus ticket. Incessantly the question was asked why, if it was so easy to move from England to Israel, I was living in London. And, with similar frequency, I was pressed to explain how a Jew like Meir Wilner could lead a pro-Moscow Communist party in Israel. Communists in Israel - the very idea puzzled them.

During one Simhat Torah night encounter in Arkhipova Street - the long road containing the Central Synagogue and focal point for the youngsters who had gathered from every part of the city to sing, dance and talk - my companion became separated from me. A friendly voice whispered in my ear that behind him where he stood in the center of a small crowd was a policeman.

I went over. My companion was expounding, in Russian, his own very personal views on Judaism. The policeman moved in, demanding his papers, his name, where he was staying. Even as he started to say that he had no identification with him, the crowd of Jews started menacingly towards the policeman. We hurried away. Their hostility was clear. Had that officer attempted anything, I have no doubt they would have torn him limb from limb.

Every chance encounter brought another story - one of the boy sitting his medical finals in Kishinev during the Six Day War who was approached by the examining professor and asked pointedly for his views on the fighting.

The boy answered that "Israel was the aggressor." But, when the professor ordered him to go to the front of the class and repeat the statement, he refused - and was ordered out of the examination room to an obligatory "fail" mark.

Some just came up to mutter their names and addresses. Others sang the words of Hatikva in my ear. Inside the synagogue, the older ones are more circumspect. They will warn you that this one and this one are informers. And the "informers" will warn you of others.

But they are clever, these old ones. A lady, aged 84, winked with one eye when she said: "Oh, yes, everything is wonderful here."

And with the other, when she added: "Everything is marvelous." They talk a kind of doubletalk with which one soon becomes familiar.

In Baku, the general atmosphere seems freer, brighter than in Moscow, but because it is a much smaller town the visitor is more closely watched. The synagogue is in a basement, with windows at street level. The rabbi is clearly frightened of talking to strangers. Voices around you whisper that the gabbai, known here as the Yoshev Rosh, is not to be trusted, that there is a man from the Religious Affairs Ministry in the congregation (later I find he is familarly known as the "malach hamavet" - the angel of death).

It seems far fetched until, returning to the synagogue to pick up something I left behind, I find the "man from the Ministry" going through my prayer book in case I have concealed something inside it. What?

At Baku synagogue on Yom Kippur I witness an unusual event. A young American, another visitor with a female companion, is reading the Haftara. The congregation stares in silent awe, some with tears pouring down their cheeks. Outside mothers lift their children to the windows so that the visitors can see them. A woman dashes up to one of the visitors to say a word and is dragged protesting away. A man comes to the synagogue late in the day and approaches one of the visitors to beg forgiveness - he had to work and hoped they would understand.

Outside more than a thousand other Jews gather, among them many young men who dare not enter lest it be noted by some informer. Any who approach the tourists, easily picked out by the cut of their clothes, are chased away by synagogue officials. One bystander says out loud: "You see what it's like here," and the official retorts: "Yes, it's very good."

Not far away down the road, there is another synagogue, a community of Caucasian mountain Jews, with 1,500 years of unbroken settlement in this part of the world. They speak no Yiddish or Hebrew. The women look and dress like desert Arab women, all in black. Their synagogue is shabby, unkept.

Leningrad, where fear is rampant! No one trusts anyone else. Outside the synagogue, set back in a courtyard capable of holding two or three hundred people, a Russian workman is busy knocking stakes into the ground. Why? He explains openly and simply that the Jews have a habit of dancing and singing here at this time of the year and that, in order to prevent a disturbance, he has orders from the police to erect a barricade.

Before we leave the city, the barricade is fully in place, effectively barring any gathering inside the synagogue compound. In other years, we are told, thousands of young Jews gathered here just as they will do in Moscow. But here it no longer is allowed.

Looking back now on the total experience, it is as if these Russian Jews were in one huge internment camp where I, the visitor, was given the unusual privilege of walking among the inmates. (They say in Leningrad that there are three types of Jews: those who have been in prison; those who are in prison; those who will go to prison.)

They touch you and say: "Give our love to the Jewish people." They pull at your sleeve and urge: "Don't forget us - we, too, belong." Talk to them about the future and they express a desperate optimism born from their hopelessness.

The older ones look to a miracle, the youngsters to some triumph of will. I walked in a Moscow park with three young men. They sang "We will overcome." But how? "We don't know, but something will happen. Something will happen."

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

by Dr. Arnold Ages

WHAT THEY THINK OF ISRAEL

The State of Israel has fought three bitter wars in its short lifetime. But it has been fighting the propaganda war much longer. Many feel that the results of this war for the minds of men will, in the long run, be the determining factor in the future of the Middle East.

This week I should like to discuss three recent books which represent a broad spectrum of opinion on Israel. The authors have diametrically opposed viewpoints on almost every question. There is another factor, moreover, which makes their essays of more than ordinary interest. One writer is Jewish, the second is an Arab and the third is a Frenchman.

Hirsham Sharabi, the second member of this trio, is professor of history at Georgetown University in Washington and author of several scholarly monographs on Middle East problems. His current contribution to this area study is Palestine And Israel The Lethal Dilemma (Pegasus), surely one of the most ingenious pieces of Arab propaganda to appear since Cecil Hourani's sophisticated article in the British magazine Encounter.

Sharabi's thesis is well known to those who espouse the Arab version of the Middle East conflict. But his approach is far removed from the customary hysteria and fanaticism which has characterized the Arab position. His language is polished and unsensational. The arguments which he marshals in defending the Arabs and attacking Israel are, on the surface, calm and persuasive.

The seductive appeal of Sharabi's style is precisely what makes it so dangerous for, despite the elegance of its prose, the book is still a distorted and malicious interpretation of the Arab-Israeli imbroglio.

One need only take Sharabi's account of the reasons for the Six Day War to see how devious the author can be. For him the whole affair was ignited by an Israeli threat to retaliate against Syria in May of 1967. Such a simplistic explanation might be expected from an official spokesman from one of the Arab countries - but surely not from a man who holds the elevated position of professor of history at a major American university.

Equally instructive is the way Professor Sharabi deals with the fundamental issue of Israel's existence. He criticizes Israel for its efforts to initiate discussions on the basis of the status quo in the area while justifying the claims of the Arab peoples who demand a return to the situation before 1948.

Israeli propaganda, asserts the author, has succeeded in making the Arabs look bad by portraying them as men bent upon wholesale slaughter of the Israeli nation. In this way the Israelis have diverted public attention away from the real issue - the illegal nature of Israel's existence.

Sharabi's interpretations is a barefaced imposition on the intellect of any educated person. It is he who is doing the diverting. To dismiss Arab threats of mass murder, as he does, is incredible in an epoch when Jews have witnessed Arab nations using gas warfare against brothers in Yemen, hanging innocent victims in Bagdad, blowing up human beings without regard for elemental principles of humanity and in recent weeks (in Lebanon) murdering border guards. Now surely the Israeli has a right to ask himself what his own fate would be at the hands of the Arabs when the latter are capable of such deeds against their own people?

This is roughly the position to which Jacques Soustelle subscribes in his extraordinary new book entitled The Long March Of Israel (American Heritage Press). Soustelle, as some of you will remember, was the dissident French rightist who broke with De Gaulle during the Algerian crisis. During his exile from France this brilliant anthropologist and cultural historian spent a long period in Israel.

His new book shows that he has penetrated deeply into the Jewish soul and has brought back from his spiritual explorations a mine of riches.

Not all Jewish readers, however, will find comfort in Soustelle's retelling of the creation of Israel. His perspective is a highly partisan one, reflecting almost exclusively the revisionist view of Zionism.

It will not be surprising then that the main heroes of his story are Jabotinsky, Begin, Eldad and others in the revisionist constellation - not Herzl, Ben Gurion and Dayan. Indeed the latter emerge in Soustelle's book as rather shadowy almost peripheral figures.

But whether one can accept the revisionist thesis or not, the fact remains that The Long March Of Israel still contains many fascinating insights into recent Jewish history. Soustelle is, for example, the first, I believe, to show that Napoleon not only was not the first great emancipator of the Jews but that he also looked forward to the creation of an independent Jewish State.

Soustelle also has a most enlightening section on the alleged influence of the Jewish vote in the U.S. By dint of statistical analysis, he shows that except for strong pockets in New York State the Jews wield no real influence at the polls. Indeed during the hectic days before the creation of the Jewish state some of the strongest moral support for Israel came from an American state which had virtually no Jewish population at all!

Objective critics will have to refrain however, from praising Soustelle's book overmuch. He has a tendency to go overboard in supporting the Jewish case in the same way that Sharabi goes to excesses in defending the Arab one.

Aubrey Hodes' Dialogue With Ishmael: Israel's Future In The Middle East (Funk and Wagnalls) easily one of the most creative and original approach to the Israel-Arab impasse, is guilty of neither of these extremes.

Hodes, a South African by birth, settled in Israel in 1949. He became associated immediately with Martin Buber's Ichud Movement (a pacifist group devoted to reconciling Arab-Jewish interests) and later became editor of the highly influential magazine, New Outlook.

Mr. Hodes' approach to Israel is one of love and understanding. His devotion to the Jewish State, however, has not blinded him to its defects.

He feels, for example, that Israel has not been sufficiently resourceful in solving the Arab refugee problem. He claims, that because of its inertia on this question, Israel lost a tremendous opportunity for peace in 1964 when president Habib Bourguiba offered suggestions on resolving the dilemma. The Israeli leadership, he argues, is a prisoner of its own myth about the Arabs.

In support of this thesis, Hodes mentions a remark made by Moshe Sharret shortly before he died. Sharret had listened to a broadcast from Radio Jordan in Arabic and then heard the Hebrew summary. The latter, he charged, had left out significant portions of the broadcast and therefore tended to confirm the image of Arabs as unreasoning belligerents. Hodes stresses throughout his book that the isolation of Israel caused by intransigent Arab hostility has produced a generation of Israelis totally ignorant of the Arab mind.

The author has a definite program for resolving the Middle East impasse and he presents this "solution" in an orderly and impressive manner.

He believes in the possibility of a genuine settlement on the basis of lengthy conversations he has had with Archbishop Hakim, a Greek Orthodox ecclesiastic who crosses the Arab-Israel borders frequently. The latter has assured Hodes that the majority of the refugees would accept monetary compensation for lands they owned in Palestine.

Working on this happy premise the author sets down a stage by stage description of how the refugee problem could be solved. His plan is ingenious and deserves the utmost attention of Israeli authorities.

One may not accept all of Mr. Hodes' formulations about the causes of Middle East tension but his careful proposals for a new beginning merit our sincere admiration.

KEEP SMILING

NATURE

During a religious lesson a little girl asked the teacher:

"Rabbi, may the fishes swim on the Sabbath day?"

"They may not," was the reply, "but they swim all the same."

LOGICAL

An immigrant Yemenite child was asked by the teacher: "What is farther away, Yemen or the moon?"

"Yemen, of course," came the prompt but unexpected reply.

"Why Yemen?" the teacher demanded to know.

Said the child: "Because I can see the moon every night but I can't see Yemen!"

SWIFT CHANGE

Watching from the window of a Tel Aviv coffee house, two patrons saw a small man with a long black beard pass by in bare feet. He wore a tattered hat, his jacket was ancient and his trousers were inside out. He seemed deeply in thought.

Suddenly, to the surprise of the onlookers, the man sat down on the curb, took off his pants and looked at them with disdain. Next he turned them outside in and put them on again. Then he turned the jacket inside out, put it on again, got up and went on his way with the assured manner of a well dressed gent.

The two men turned to their waiter with a quizzical look on their faces. "Why not?" shrugged the waiter. "That chap's probably got an invitation for dinner and he wants to change."

NO EFFECT

A woman tried to bring her pet dog, a toy poodle, into a Tel Aviv movie house. "I'm sorry, we can't let you in with the dog," said the usher. But the woman insisted and the manager was called.

"I'm sorry, madam," he said politely. "You must not bring your dog into the theater."

"Don't worry," said the woman, "the picture won't harm him."

Letters to the Editor

BLAU DEFENDED

Dear Editor:

Only now has the story, Blau Demoted, in the September 26th issue of The Canadian Jewish News, been brought to our attention.

Generally speaking, the facts about the Neturei Karta as stated by the correspondent, Moshe Ron, were quite correct. There is one important exception, however, which gives the entire story an utterly wrong meaning and which makes the headline express an absolute untruth.

While Rabbi Blau (like Moses, the greatest of all Jews) married a convert and while both he and his wife have been subject to many attacks by ignorant or narrow-minded Jews, Rabbi Blau is, as he always has been, the undisputed, highly respected and most beloved leader of all Neturei Karta.

As the American affiliate of the Neturei Karta, our group, like many others throughout the world, is witness to the fact that this respect for Rabbi Blau is not confined to the Holy Land but is universal.

There is another misleading statement in this story. Mr. Ron refers to the attacks of "members of the Neturei Karta" on Dr. Maier "during his prayers at the Wailing Wall." It may well be that Dr. Maier was attacked in this way but the attackers under no circumstances could have been members of the Neturei Karta because of the P'sak by the Rabbi of Satmar and hundreds of other rabbis which forbids strictly any visit to the Wailing Wall since the beginning of the Zionist occupation of Old Jerusalem two years ago.

SERMON FOR THE WEEK

WELL OF BLESSING

Dearth of water is a recurring theme in the Bible story in relation to the land of Israel. It is still a bone of contention between Israel and its neighbouring States. The Torah does not reveal why, in a country with such a dire need of water, the Philistines should have stopped up the wells dug by Abraham. Nor does it explain why they now quarrelled with Isaac when he opened them anew.

All that we are told is the progress of this struggle, indicated by the names Isaac gave to the new wells he had dug. One he called "Esek," strife or contention; another he called "Sitnah", hatred,—as if to say, Here I am working to make this land fruitful, and all the Philistines can do is to obstruct.

But while the Torah does not supply the motive behind Philistine obstructiveness, tradition suggests that the Philistines were afraid that the wells were attracting too many strangers to the country. They would prefer that Isaac himself move on to pastures new, and the wish finds overt expression when at last, jealous of his success, they say to him, "Go from us, for thou hast become too mighty for us."

The point is symbolic of the Jew's fate throughout the long history of his dispersion. Wherever the Dispersion carried him, there was a well of creative ability that went before him. There is not a country where the Jew has lived that has not benefitted from his presence. Whether in Alexandria or in Antioch, in Bagdad or in Barcelona, and down to our times throughout the cities of the civilised world, Israel bestowed of his gifts to the nations of the world. But true to their ancient forbears, the Philistines, the Ferdinands and the Hitlers have resented the wells of blessings the Jew has opened up. They have tried to stop up the wells and turn the clock of progress backwards; again and again the philistine refrain has reached our ears: "Go from us, for you have become too mighty for us."

Nowhere, however, has the old Biblical story of Isaac and the Philistines been so faithfully re-enacted as in the Land of Israel itself. For the last 1800 years since the Jew was exiled from his land, how efficiently were the wells stopped up! The land that was once flowing with milk and honey was literally turned into a desert; but back came the Isaacs of our day to reopen the old wells. The fruit of his creative toil have brought blessing to the land, and could transform the whole of that arid area. Once again he has met with "Esek" and "Sitnah" for his pains. The modern philistine would rather have it remain a desolate and barren desert than share its fruitfulness with the seed of Isaac!

But the Bible story gives us hope. It tells us that Isaac's persistence was rewarded. He dug yet another well and was able to call it "Rehovot", enlargement, —"for now God has given us room, and we shall be fruitful in the land".

Rabbi Akiva saw a repetition of this great event in the Jerusalem of the future, when he foresaw a similar ending to the conflict between the descendants of Isaac and the offshoots of the Philistines. When that enlargement comes, and the strident cacophony of piled-up armaments and militant posturing dies down, the new well that will go up from there will bring blessing to all the peoples of the world.

It's the FIGHTING Jew

Tel Aviv.-Menachem Begin, Gahal Minister without Portfolio, who spoke last Saturday evening at a Balfour Day Dinner, was in a defiant--and undiplomatic--mood. "It is not up to any government to tell the remnants of the Jewish people where our security lies," he declared.

"We will not listen to any diplomat who comes to tell us we should not take seriously Arab threats of extermination. Were we not told in the '30s not to take seriously Hitler's threats to exterminate European Jewry, on the ground that they were destined 'for internal purposes'?

"If it is necessary, we shall fight--but not on the beaches of Tel Aviv. The world which did not pity the slaughtered Jew, will respect the fighting Jew."

THEATRE MUSIC FILM
by D. COHN

* Dr. Vilem Benda, director of the Jewish State Museum in Prague, is a guest of the Israel Museum there. His appearance was approved last June by the Czechoslovak Ministry of Culture as part of an exchange visits-program for representatives of the Jewish State Museum which also includes visits to the Soviet Union, the United States and Germany. Two curators of the Israel Museum are expected to reciprocate a visit to Prague within the next few months.

The Jewish State Museum in Prague is one of the largest Jewish museums in the world. It has many precious art treasures saved from the Nazi holocaust and is one of Prague's main tourist attractions with 750,000 visitors every year.

* Some scientists believe they have found the remains of Noah's Ark buried deep in a frozen lake near the ice-capped summit of Mount Ararat in eastern Turkey. Though not all of the scientists who have studied the timber agree that it forms part of the ark, they are convinced that there is a large wooden artifact of great antiquity in the lake.

An expedition is planned to haul heavy machinery up the mountain next year to remove ice and glacial debris from the lake's surface.

Although the Bible says "the mountains of Ararat" were the resting place of the ark, some archeological research, notably that of Sir Leonard Woolley, places the flood area in the lower reaches of the Euphrates, 2,000 miles away.

* A new novelist, short story writer, essayist, critic, esthetician, superintellectual is making her way upward on the theatrical horizon: Susan Sontag. For many years she has harbored one large, unfulfilled ambition---to direct movies.

"I would have taken any offer just to show I could do it," she says. "I would have gone to Afghanistan." She only had to go to Sweden.

The sudden offer which came last year gave her full freedom. The only suggestion from the producer was that the film not be too costly. It amounted to $180,000. "The genius of the Swedish films," she says, "is the invisibility of the producer. Mine didn't see the picture until it was finished."

As a result, Duet for Cannibals, written, directed, edited and subtitled by Miss Sontag, filmed entirely in Sweden, in Swedish, has been one of the hits at the New York Film Festival. Now officially she is a movie director.

She has spent a good part of her life in theaters seeing movies. She has watched many directors work, including her friend Mike Nichols. "I admire the way he gets people to do what he wants then to do without making them feel oppressed. That's my way."

She is comfortable in the movies. "I feel freer on film. I think a lot about images. That's why I say my film is a film and could never have been a novel. I never found that language could do all I wanted it to do. I always found language a somewhat resistant medium. I feel more at home in films. It's the sequence and rhythm of images that's important. Language is secondary. I hope to go on writing fiction and making films."

She is on her third novel.

. Shmuel Rodensky, the 60-year-old Israeli star of Anatevka, the West German version of Sholem Aleichem's Fiddler on the Roof, and Werner Schmid, producer, eached received Golden Record awards in Duesseldorf last week. More than 150,000 records of hit tunes from the show have been sold.

Rodensky arrived in Hamburg from Tel Aviv in December, 1967, to take the lead in the musical. He has appeared in nearly 1,000 performances before enthusiastic audiences in Hamburg, Duesseldorf, West Berlin, Cologne and Munich.

. Benny Goodman made his first recording session in 1926 at the age of 17. The clarnetist joined Ben Pollack's orchestra in August, 1925, at the age of 16.

. Elliott Gould, a tall, ruggedly handsome actor in his late 20s, who is separated now from Barbra Streisand, married her four years ago in Carson City, Nevada, while she was appearing with Liberace at Lake Tahoe.

Reminisces Gould, "We first met while we were both in, I Can Get It For You Wholesale, in New York. Then I went to London for On the Town and followed this with a tour of the United States in The Fantasticks. Recently I toured with Shelley Winters in Luv; now I'm preparing to play Minsky in the motion picture, The Night They Raided Minsky's.

While Gould proved his point that he's not exactly a tyro at this acting business, it was clear he's not a coat holder for his famous wife.

Four Power talks to be resumed

New York (JCNS).- Four-Power talks between the United Nations representatives of Britain, France, the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. are expected to be resumed in the middle of this month, after a break of four months. The talks began in April of this year and recessed at the end of June.

Reports here said that the U.S. was shifting its position away from that of Israel and more towards that of the Arabs. According to these reports, Joseph Sisco, the Assistant Secretary of State for Near East Affairs, conveyed new principles for a settlement to Anatoly Dobrynin, the Soviet Ambassador to the U.S., in Washington last Tuesday.

The two men have been conducting bilateral talks on the Middle East for some time.

America's new proposals are said by reliable sources to include: Israeli withdrawal to the 1949 armistice lines; discussion about the Gaza Strip and Sharm el Sheikh; discussion of demilitarized zones and the dispatch of a United Nations force to police them; inclusion of all the provisions of the Security Council resolution of November, 1967.

It is hoped in U.S. circles that sufficient progress will have been made in the Sisco-Dobrynin talks for the Four Power talks to discuss principles which could be conveyed later to the U.N. special envoy, Gunnar Jarring, for negotiation with Israel and the Arabs.

A U.S. spokesman said that America expected the talks to resume soon, although "we do not want to get tied down to that kind of time frame." This was in reference to a statement last week by Lord Caradon, Britain's U.N. representative, that the talks "should be resumed within a week or two."

Moscow seems willing for the discussions to be resumed even though America has expressed doubt, both in private and in public, that the Soviet Union really wants peace in the Middle East.

BLACK JEWS WANT PEACE

by Ben Gailor

A Black American Rabbi says Black Jews are not affiliated with any militant groups. Rabbi Abel Respes told a large group of young people last Sunday night that he doesn't feel violence is the answer to the Negro's problem, that, "As we do more for ourselves, the gap between black and white will be narrowed."

The Rabbi and his fifteen-family congregation have done much for themselves. The Rabbi himself is completely self educated in Judaism and, in turn, he teaches congregants in Hamilton, New Jersey.

The 49-year old Rabbi, born in Philadelphia, was guest lecturer for Hillel at the Bloor Street YM-YWHA. He outlined his own life and how he feels the incidents that led to his being "ordained" to serve his people . . . the Black Jews of America.

Rabbi Respes' mission began in 1933 at the Bar Mitzvah age of 13. He was struck by lightening while playing with some friends and to his parents he appeared "to be engulfed in fire from the head to the waist, but I was not burned."

One night, at the age of 28, he heard a voice whisper "See God" in his ear; at the same moment there was an "electrifying" feeling through his body. He covered his head with his blanket in fear, but then could not remove the blanket. "And the next moment there was a strong gust of wind against the east wall of my room, and again I could move the blanket. I know I heard a voice, but saw no one." Rabbi Respes thinks it significant that the bolt of lightening came from the east as it had struck him years before the second incident.

Later, in dreams, he became aware of "being ordained" as a leader for the Black Jews. He began his educational quest, reading the Bible and Jewish books; he learned the customs, history and the Hebrew language all on his own. He could seek no assistance. At times he prayed for enlightenment while studying and he frequently fasted for three-day periods. On one occasion, he fasted and studied for seven days, taking no food at all during that time. Previously he had only received ten years of formal education, leaving to work while yet in high school.

The more he learned of Judaism the more he became convinced the only answer for the Black man was a return to Torah, from which he feels the Blacks were banished many centuries ago by God. Through Biblical quotations Rabbi Respes made a strong case to support his theory that Jews in 586 B.C.E. were black, that they were later intermingled with the white populace. Eventually the Blacks lost Israel through "idolotrous practices."

His own return to Judaism, he feels, is through direct ancestry. As a child, his father told him the family background held Sephardic Jews.

Since beginning his search for knowledge about 20 years ago, Rabbi Respes has in turn taught his wife, as well as his seven sons and seven daughters. Six of the boys old enough put on Tephillan with the Rabbi each day and he states proudly he has had no delinquiency with any of them.

Though Respes calls himself "Rabbi," he is not officially ordained in the traditional sense. He does not have the rabbinic degree but he considers himself a rabbi in every aspect of the word.

The Rabbi began his first congregation in Philadelphia in 1951. At the same time he searched for other sincere followers through radio broadcasts, which he continued till 1960. "It was difficult," he says, "to permeate Jewish thought, because the Blacks are so maligned in their textbooks and because of the complications of the ghetto."

Then in the early part of this decade, he and four other Black Jewish families moved 30 miles from the City of Brotherly Love, building their own homes in the small community of Hamilton, New Jersey. In 1966, they constructed their own synagogue, "not elaborate, but it serves well as a House of Worship and Hebrew school."

The children attend the Talmud Torah three or four days a week after public school and for three hours on Sunday while the adults attend two nights a week. Rabbi Respes is the only teacher, but his children help with the younger students who begin attending at pre-school age.

There are weekly Saturday services conducted completely in Hebrew, except for a sermon which is delivered in English. The Congregation is traditional in the sense that it is midway between the Orthodox and Conservative ritual and since it insists that men and women sit separately during services. But the Rabbi does not feel the traditional aspect is being compromised for some of the members must drive to Hamilton from Philadelphia on the Sabbath.

Rabbi Respes says it is hard to tell just how many Black Jews there are in America . . . "statistics just aren't kept and there has been very little dialogue between groups in the past." He feels estimates of more than 150,000 are somewhat high but does point out there are about six congregations in New York City, about four in Philadelphia, some in Chicago, Boston and Los Angeles in addition to the dark-colored Jews of Israel.

Anyone subscribing for membership in the faith must know and be trained in Judaism's 613 tennets of faith before he can become a convert. Men also must be circumsized. "Our shule doesn't have a Mikyeh (ritualarium) but conversion is based more on knowledge than on birth."

The Rabbi is not opposed to intermarriage with white Jews but maintains "the problem is not with us, we're not embarrassed to intermarry. I know of one or two such marriages which seem to be acceptable. Our relations with white Jews," he says, "are friendly."

His congregants feel for the struggle of their Black brothers but do not subscribe with the anti-Israel sentiments of Black militant Stokely Carmichael. "As Blacks and as Jews, it is very difficult for us to know our fellow Jews involved in such things as Hadassah than to know them as Blacks confronting shrewd businessmen, the landlord or the merchant. The Black Power advocates aren't concerned with us and we don't feel violence is the answer to the Negro's problem."

Rabbi Respes is planning a trip to the Holy Land, his first, next year. His feeling as a Jew first, an American second and a Black third causes him to stand up and say, "Israel must live, and it shall. It will live not only as a nationalistic homeland but in its destiny of peace, goodwill and brotherhood. Maybe some day my people too will go to Israel." He let his young listeners know that as Jews we're all really the same.

And the final words from this selfmade man, a teacher, a Black Jew, were good to hear, "Am Yisrael Chai - (Long live Israel)!"

PORTNOY BOTHERS THEM

JEWISH WIVES MALIGNED, RESEARCH FINDS OUT

New York (JCNS).- Jewish mothers still cringe at the mention of one Alexander Portnoy of Philip Roth's famous "complaint." How authentic really was Roth's picture of the Jewish mother?

Two women set out to answer that question even before it was asked, since their research into the myth and reality of the Jewish wife began before Portnoy was a gleam in Roth's eye. Gwen Gibson Schwartz and Barbara Wyden approached 200 Jewish and an equal number of non-Jewish wives with a number of questions; from the answers they have come to the conclusion that the Jewish wives are "perhaps the world's most libelled females."

They found that: Jewish couples have a better working partnership than their non-Jewish neighbors; Jewish wives are less materialistic than their non-Jewish opposite numbers; Jewish wives do not want to be like previous generations, and their sense of Jewishness is very strong.

Their survey commissioned from one of America's leading public opinion pollsters, is contained in "The Jewish Wife," just published here.

Communication between Jewish husbands and wives was remarkably close, the two women found. When husbands went on business trips 60% of the Jewish wives (but only 40.3% of the non-Jews) received telephone calls from their husbands every day.

Almost two-thirds (70.4%) of the Jewish wives, but only 57.6% of the non-Jewish women, reported that the husbands' business was the subject they most frequently discussed.

Jewish couples, it was found, spend relatively little time apart, and only 10.3% of the Jewish wives (and 15.2% of the non-Jewish women) said that they occasionally took trips without their husbands.

When the researchers asked the two groups of women which possessions they prized the most, the replies, "my family", "my health", etc. were about te same. When it came to material items, there was a difference: More non-Jews than Jews thought of home, car, appliances and furniture.

As for the Jewish mother 54.9% of the Jewish wives in the survey, but only 43.5% of the non-Jewish women, said a married daughter should see her parents at least once a week, while 52.6% of the Jews and 39.7% of the non-Jews said a married son should see them once a week.

The Jewish wives' sense of Jewishness was found to be strong: 75.1% of the Jews and 43.5% of the non-Jews said they would not feel comfortable living in a community where there are almost no other members of the same religion. Jewish wives, it was found, considered themselves "ambassadors to the Gentile world" who must always act and look their best.

What would they like their children to be? None of the Jewish wives chose "astronaut" as a profession while five non-Jewish women did. Nursing ranked near the bottom for Jewish wives as a desirable profession for their daughters, while it ranked second, after teaching, among the non-Jewish women.

Eban says

Nasser obstructs Mideast accord

Tel Aviv (JCNS). - Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban said here after President Nasser's warlike speech to the Egyptian National Assembly that Nasser was the only obstacle to peace in the Middle East.

"The speech," said Eban, "exposed Nasser for what he really is. It expressed the traditionally aggressive policy which Egypt has pursued under Nasser's rule and reflected the frustration and decline of Egyptian dictatorship. It also revealed Nasser's true aspirations to eliminate Israel's sovereignty and existence."

So long as Nasser was at the helm and refused to view the Middle East situation realistically, it would continue to be fraught with danger, and escalation would be unavoidable.

"Nasser's speech," Eban declared, "will only strengthen Israel's resolve both to deter aggression and to demonstrate to the world the contrast between Egypt's belligerency and Israel's policy and vision of peace."

THE GREAT FLIGHT

by Ephraim Kishon

"Is Enzi going to play?"

Yes, that was the question which on that Sabbath afternoon exercized the fans of the champion team, "Lightning-Holon," meeting "Hapoel Kfar Maccabi" in a fateful match of the National League. The excitement was understandable according to well informed circles, the team coach had been given secret orders by the management to keep an eye on the players, and the spectators indeed saw him before the start of the game, running about among the players, counting them and double-checking.

The reason was well known to all: the team scouts had found passports in the effects of several players, among them the legendary Enzi, as the affectionate fans had nicknamed Pomerantz. As a matter of fact, this surprised only those who did not know the real Enzi. This football star extorted from his club everything that could be extorted: not only had they arranged light work for him: parttime baby sitter with a childless family, but on top of that they had granted him an increased training bonus as well as a desert bonus. Everybody thought that Pomerantz at least had been satisfied, but about two weeks ago it was learned that the player had been seen leaving a bookstore carrying -- an English dictionary!

The club acted promptly: two fulltime detectives were hired and assigned to tail Enzi wherever he went. The open clash between Enzi and his club happened on that Wednesday when the player came to the manager and demanded that he too be hired as detective.

"I can tail myself better than anyone else," Enzi explained, "and then at least I'll be able to live on my salary . . ."

"Never!" the manager answered and the veins bulged on his neck. "I won't tolerate professionalism here! We won't sink into the shameful quagmire in which English, Hungarian and Brazilian football has been for many years now. You are a sportsman, Pomerantz!"

"All right, so from now I want to be considered an entertainer."

"Never!" Thus the manager. "You shouldn't make your living out of football!"

"Then call it football!"

"Never!" the manager raised his voice. "So long as I'm managing the club at whose head my party has placed me, I won't stand for any ugly professionalism.

"Because," the manager added, "once ugly professionalism gets into it, I won't be able to keep my job at the head of the club. Is that clear?"

That sounded logical. Pomerantz left without another word and on that very day demonstratively bought himself particularly dark sunglasses, as the detectives noted in their daily report. The alarming signs quickly increased: suddenly the player's wife appeared to be calm and happy, and dyed her hair blonde, then . . . she bought . . . two suitcases!

The entire Football Federation was gripped by panic.

"The situation is serious," the Secretary General frankly admitted to the assembled Executive. "A star player like Pomerantz nets our Federation about $3,350 a year, and now he goes and schemes to take off overseas because there they are offering him $200 a month. What can we do prevent him from leaving? For goodness sake, what is to be done? What are we going to do? . . ."

It was really a hard question. The Football Federation already had tried everything to put some order into this important branch of sports. After our loss against Luxembourg, revolutionary changes were made in the Federation's setup - namely, Hapoel received 12 seats on the Executive, i.e., an additional representative at the expense of Maccabi, and another floor was added to the office building at a cost of $1,675. It was then that two fullbacks, a halfback and a slightly used leftwing deserted the National Team and emigrated to Australia, South Africa and Ghana respectively. The Federation reacted promptly. The salary of the National Team Coach Xoxa Czorjekraci, of Albania, was raised to $2,-000 a week and the number of accompanying officials was doubled.

Not even this helped!

What was to be done? What could be done to keep the players?

"Lightning" made a last desperate effort which bordered on humiliation: the Team Manager took Pomerantz down to the Negev, and in the middle of the wilderness, out of range of any human ear, he made him a whispered offer of a $1 premium for every goal scored by him.

"Score a hundred goals a month," the manager proposed, "and you've got one hundred net, tax-free . . ."

Seeing the players blank face, the manager proposed to pay 50¢ even in the case of a draw. But Enzi stood there, pale and adamant:

"One hundred," he said.

"Fixed salary! . . ."

Immediately the watch on Pomerantz was reinforced with four additional detectives. The deployment of this huge apparatus for preventing escapes was a great burden on the Federation's budget, but that venerable institution was ready for any sacrifice for the sake of clean and honest sports. And it must be admitted that only thanks to these special precautions did Enzi show up against "Hapoel Kfar Maccabi" on that fateful day.

The groups' actions were coordinated fully. The two tailing scouts reported by radio during the early morning hours that Mrs. Pomerantz had left the house carrying a suitcase. Within 20 minutes the Lydda Airport group discovered that a seat had been booked for a mystery passenger with a cargo of balls on the plane to Rome. What happened then is known from the daily press: The plane was sequestrated. The frontiers were closed. At 1 p.m. the player left his home and jumped into a taxi where two strong-arm boys were waiting for him. They hit over the head with rubber truncheons.

Enzi regained consciousness on the football field in the locker room of his team. The coach faced him with a cocked pistol in his hand:

"You make just one false move and I'll shoot you down like a mad dog," the coach said. "Now get out and play!"

Pomerantz offered only token resistance:

"Come on, be a sport, pay me at least a $2.50 obeying premium . . ."

"Out!"

Enzi doubled out of the locker room with the rest of the team. The eyes of 50,-000 fans were on him. They had paid $3.50 per head to see him. By then everybody knew that the Federation had asked for an injunction to prevent Enzi's leaving the country since this represented a de facto smuggling of capital abroad.

The rest is known to every family in Israel from the commentary of Nehemia ben Avraham:

" . . . the ball is with Pomeranz in this 19th minute of the game," the popular sportscaster reported. "He feints beautifully to pass the player assigned to guard him, dashes headlong up the length of the touchline, does some brilliant dribbling and drops the two fullbacks, turns right, passes the goalline still carrying the ball, runs up the stairs of the grandstand, dodges three spectators who try to stop him, dashes past the coach, climbs up the fence and jumps clear of the field -- in the 21st minute, Pomeranz has escaped!"

The audience rises to its feet, thrilled by the superb performance, but soon enough it is found that Enzi after all had been stopped outside. The management of Lightning Holon had bagged him in a net they had spread out below the fence. The ball had again passed into the hands of the Federation.

"Enzi, don't be a fool," the Club Chairman gasped as he dragged back the centerforward. We'll give you a $1.50 haircut allowance and a cheese sandwich before every play . . ."

Complete anarchy reigned on the field. The goalkeeper of Hapoel Kfar Maccabi had taken advantage of the disturbance created by Pomeranz's break and had tried to escape through the police gate. At the last minute he was returned in handcuffs and his club chairman tried to appease him with a one-time, stay-put bonus. The referee noticed what was happening and ruled a penalty shot for an amateurship violation.

Who will kick the penalty shot?

Enzi! Enzi!

Pomeranz prepared carefully, took off and landed a mighty kick -- in the ground. The ball did not even reach the goal . . .

What's happened? The audience wondered. This was not their Enzi! This was somebody else!

And indeed, only now was it noticed that the player down there was short, thin and unkempt whereas Enzi was a bald giant . . .

This happened in the 38th minute!

The real Pomeranz had left the country's shores ten minutes earlier in a small motor boat in the general direction of Cyprus. The operation had been planned with an eye for detail worthy of "Rififi": Enzi indeed had climbed the fence, but somebody else disguised as Pomeranz had jumped off it. The time he gained enabled him to make the coast. The plane ticket had been a decoy. The suitcase had been filled with stones. He was not even married. Today Enzi is the star of the Skymaster Team in Rhodesia, he makes $1,890 a month net, and has got a lot of chestnut-haired servant girls. And what's even more annoying, he is the coauthor of the bestseller: "I Was Pomeranz's Double."

IN CONCERT--TEL AVIV and JERUSALEM--1969
NEHAMA LIFSCHITZ

נחמה ליפשיץ
FIRST APPEARANCES OUTSIDE SOVIET UNION

When Nehama Lifschitz sang in Tel Aviv, all of Israel was her chorus.

With cheers. Tears. And song. Because to thousands of Jews, listening to Miss Lifschitz was like meeting a long-forgotten piece of themselves. A piece almost lost in the tumult and barriers of the Cold War.

Just as Edith Piaf captured some piece of the French, and let the world marvel at its sad beauty, Miss Lifschitz has done the same for Soviet Jews.

Said Golda Meir, "When I heard her here, I actually saw her not only as a great singer, but I heard her as if I was listening to Soviet Jewry."

But it would be a mistake to leave her cherished only by Jews. Just as it would have been foolish to limit Edith Piaf to the French. National singer she may be, but in her voice and song Miss Lifschitz uncovers a world that still touches ours.

What they heard in Israel, you can listen to forever.

THE NAHAL

VISITING NEW SETTLEMENTS

by Moshe Ron

(Tel Aviv).- It was the first time that editors of the Israeli press had made a trip from Tulcarm to Jericho via the Jordan Valley up to Nahal Argaman. We passed Ramallah, Nablus and the Damia Bridge, the open border between Israel and Jordan, where thousands of Arabs from both sides meet with their families and through which huge transports of vegetables and fruit pass from Israel to Jordan.

We travel under a strong military guard in front and behind. We pass many Arab villages on the road to Beisan. We can see the Jordan River. It is 9 a.m. We meet Arabs with donkeys. In the villages the shops are opening, some Arabs are already sitting in the cafes. The Arabs look at our cars and the military jeeps accompanying us on all sides and surely think: they must be very important people.

We arrive at Nahal Argaman. This is a new Nahal settlement, a strategic military post, which is situated on a high mountain, from which you can see clearly the Jordan River and the positions of the Arab Legion.

Nahal represents the military youth battalions which are instructed in military and agricultural matters. The name Argaman derives from two military heroes, Colonel Arye Regew and Captain Gad Manela, who found death here a year ago in a clash with Arab terrorists.

This strategic point is typical of the special character of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, a synthesis between a military camp and an agricultural settlement. Young men and women soldiers are schooled here as soldiers and agricultural experts. We see many boys and girls with rifles tilling the soil. The whole vicinity is empty of inhabitants. The Arabs have not cultivated this ground for generations. Only the Nahal youth has planted tomatoes, onions, potatoes and other vegetables. They found water resources. They are proud of turning wasteland into fertile ground. Before these grounds belonged to the Government of Jordan.

We were introduced to the Commander of the Nahal settlements in the Jordan Valley. He came as a child to Eretz Israel with his parents from Warsaw. He is a stout, sun-tanned man of 30. They call him Zvika (Zvi Levanon). His reddish moustache, uniform and military boots represent the characteristic type of Zahal officer. Among the thousands of boys and girls in the Nahal are also some from abroad, who come for the periof of 15 months to Israel in order to help build the country. There are boys and girls from all parties, starting with Communists from Moshe Sneh and ending with yeshiva scholars. We meet many members of the kibbutz settlements, from lay and religious settlements. All pass military training and do agricultural work for a period of two years.

From Argaman we go to a second Nahal settlement -- Kalia. On the way preparations are under way to establish a new Nahal post in the name of the military hero, Major Chanan Samson, who was killed in battle with terrorists. Nahal Kalia is situated in the part of the Dead Sea district where there were three Jewish settlements before the creation of the State of Israel: the potash works of Engineer Navomeiski, Kalia and Beir Arava (A house in the desert). Nearby was the famous tourist hotel Kalia. During the fighting in 1948, Zahal had to evacuate this area. The Jordanians destroyed all Jewish settlements and turned the place once again into a desert.

Only on May 20, 1968, exactly 20 years after leaving this place, Nahal returned to re-establish a Jewish settlement in the northern part of the Dead Sea. Now a new road is being built from here to Ein Gedi. When it is finished, it will be possible to go by car along the eastern border of Israel from the Golan Heights to Eilat.

In the desert on the shores of the Dead Sea, fruits and vegetables have been planted; apples, pears, melons, tomatoes, bananas, potatoes etc. Here geese are also raised.

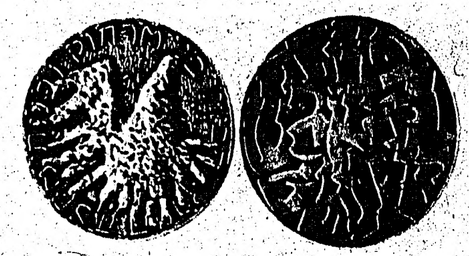
The Nahal soldiers and pioneers live here under very hard conditions. It is extremely difficult to develop agriculture here in the lowest place on earth, where temperatures often reach 50 deg. centigrade. Water resources are scarce. Water experts are performing several experiments and tests in order to turn salty water into drinking water. This region is called the Dead Sea region, because hardly any living soul can live here owing to the salty water and the intense heat.

With great obstinacy and zeal the military pioneers of Nahal have turned the desert into an oasis. They have redeemed the earth from salt and now you can even see basins in which fish are bred.

When we arrived at Nahal Kalia, the Jordanians shelled the area and the commander of the settlement immediately ordered us to seek refuge in the shelters. Young women soldiers led us to the shelters and told us not to be afraid. The Jordanians only wanted the newspaper editors to smell the odour of powder. After a short while the shelling ceased and we felt better.

We had lunch with the Chief of Staff of the Israeli Army, General Chaim Bar-Lev, who praised the great military achievements and important tasks of Nahal. Up till then Nahal had established nine settlements in the Golan Heights around the city of Kuneitra. Another settlement was erected near the Hermon mountain, another on the road from Zemach, Nahal Sinai south from El Arish (in the northern part of the Sinai Peninsula), Nahal-Yam near Kanata, Nahal-Dikla near Rafiah (in the Gaza zone), Nahal-Zafor in the Negev Desert, Kfar Etzion, and Nahal Mehula (south of Beit Shean).

Altogether there are 40 Nahal units in the country, half of them stable Jewish settlements. After a visit to the Nahal settlements we returned to Tel Aviv in a good mood and high spirits. We had seen that we can rely on our youngsters who settled on the borders of our country. We were sorry that we had the opportunity of visiting only two of these extraordinary settlements.



EL AL'S LATEST AND MOST BEAUTIFUL MEDAL--This medal, seen front and in reverse, marks the occasion of the 20th anniversary of civil aviation in Israel—meaning El Al Airlines—designed by the late Ben Shahn, one of the great artists of our time. The medal symbolizes that which unites Israel and the Diaspora, an air link as well as spiritual bond. "Bring back my sons from far and my daughters from the end of the earth." Each letter on the medal is a story unto itself; all the letters together are Jewish consciousness.

BEIRUT CALLING

by Lionel Davidson

The other day my elder son came urgently into the study and said, "The Egyptians have crossed the canal. They've landed troops and there's a lot of Israeli dead."

"Who said so?"

"The BBC. Quick. It's still on."

I hurried through and caught the end of the report. It sounded bad. We turned in to the Israeli news and waited anxiously. There was nothing about the raid in the news, or in the next bulletin. In the one after, the announcer said the Army had been investigating an Egyptian claim to have crossed the canal.

The location announced by the Egyptians was empty marsh-land. Fresh craters in it and a number of aircraft-type Russian rocket pods showed there had been a hit-and-run raid, probably by a single aircraft. There was no sign of a troop landing or of any other damage. Visits were being organized for newsmen who wished to investigate.

I didn't hear if the BBC took advantage of the offer, or if it reported the Israeli denial. I'm sure it will have done the latter. But the story raises issues. Should such an alarming and unconfirmed report have been broadcast at all?

The standard BBC reply, that it will report claims, if official, as well as denials, if official, is to say the least, disingenuous. Any newsman knows there are more Arab claims than Israeli ones, and that most are extravagant if not totally untrue; also that a current story gets more air time than its later brief denial.

In other spheres as in the fable, the boy who too often cries wolf ends up by not being believed. It's very doubtful if the experienced newsmen of the BBC do believe the blood-curdling Arab stories. Why then do they give them currency?

The reason, almost certainly, is organizational. The Corporation has a very strong organization in the Arab lands, where the claims originate. It has no organization at all in Israel, where the denials come from.

This strange state of affairs stems not from BBC policy but from the Foreign Office's. It is the Foreign Office which decides where External Service broadcasts should be directed. Last year it decided they should no longer be directed to Israel. It decided that Arabic broadcasts should continue at the top of the list.

Britain's French service (where it is pleading its case to enter the Common Market) gets 38 1/2 hours a week; the Russian service, 30 hours. The Arabic service gets 70 hours a week.

With the largest allotment of any foreign language service and the lion's share of the budget the Arabic service demands a large organization.

It has it. Headquarters are in Beirut, where it has its own offices and studios. Many of the programs transmitted from London are produced and recorded in these studios. The studios maintain close contacts with other Arab stations. Thus a very strong news service has been built up.

There is here a classic example of the tail wagging the dog. Because the Foreign Office directs the BBC to beam a lot of news to the Arabs, the news-center thus locally required beams back to the BBC the main Middle Eastern news. But the main Middle Eastern news is war news, and the only country capable of making any, significantly, is Israel.

Israel is thus the true news-center of the Middle East. What representation has the world-renowned BBC in this news center?

It has the services of my friend Michael Elkins, part time. The American magazine Newsweek has the other part. Mr. Elkins is a brilliant correspondent, one of the best the BBC has. But he is a human, with two legs and one mouth.

Can the BBC be satisfied with having half a correspondent in the nerve center of what we are told is an area that can imperil the peace of Britain and the world? And if it is, are those who foot the bill for the service equally satisfied?

When Beirut rather than Britannia appears to be ruling the BBC waves, I'd get interested if I were a Westminster man.

AGE EXTENDED

ARMY RESERVISTS UPPED TO 55

Tel Aviv.- The military callup age of reservists has been extended to 55 years of age.

The added age groups should bolster Zahal's numerical strength by tens of thousands of soldiers and help spread the burden over larger segments of the population.

Active duty units now will include men up to the age of 49 (provided they are still in good health) while the remaining six-age groups will be shifted to civil defense duties ('Haga').

The decision, taken by the Cabinet, was passed on to the Knesset's Foreign Affairs and Security Committee by Defense Minister Moshe Dayan and was confirmed after discussion.

Well informed sources said that civil defense men who have been released from military service would now be recalled to the colors. It was pointed out that the term used in discharging people from military service was "released" and not "discharged," and that the decision to extend the callup age, dictated as it was by the increased manpower requirements of both the army and civil defense units, was at discretion of the Defense Ministry.

The extension of the callup age will not affect the volunteer guard set up in Haifa last week. Mayor Moshe Flieman explained that most of the volunteers - numbering several thousand - were of higher age, and would not be liable to conscription in the Army reserves.

PLAN TO BUILD LIBERAL TEMPLE IN ISRAEL

New York (JCNS).- The National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, the women's organization of the Liberal Movement in the United States, has decided to build a synagogue in Israel as a gift to 800 elementary schoolchildren and teenagers at Ben Shemen Children's Village near Lydda.

Announcing the decision at the Federation's convention in Miami Beach, Mrs. David M. Levitt, the organization's president, said that the small house of worship would contain a library and an assembly hall. Ground would be broken in March of next year.

The Children's Village is composed of orphans and underpriviledged or displaced young people from recent anti-Jewish outbursts in Arab countries.

Mrs. Levitt said that no effort would be made to "transplant the forms of worship of Liberal Jews in the West. We merely will provide the material assistance and a helping hand."

Israeli Orthodoxy has looked askance at any move to widen Reform - Liberal Judaism in the State.

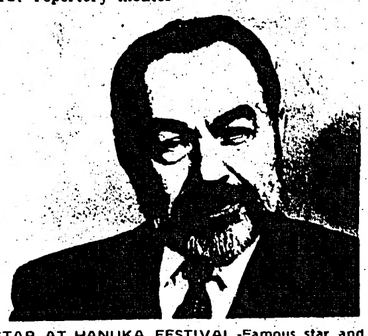
PLAY FOR YOUNGSTERS

Young People's Theater and the St. Lawrence Center have agreed to coproduce a play for children as part of the first repertory theater season at the new Center.

Young People's Theater was incorporated in September, 1966, as a nonprofit organization. It has been presented to over 360,000 young people, from kindergarten through grade 9. Several plays were original by Canadian writers: Rod Chudley, Anna Paulo-Heimo, Pat Patterson, Dodi Robb, Diane Stapley, Chris Wiggins. Tours have been undertaken through out Ontario.



STAR AT HANUKA FESTIVAL.-Famous star and art collector Edward G. Robinson, who will appear at the All-Israel Hanuka Festival, Sunday, December 14th, at O'Keefe Center, sponsored by Toronto State of Israel Bonds.

SWEETHEART OF SONG.-Vera Lynn, the girl from London's East End whose voice, during World War II, was the link between tens of thousands of servicemen and women and their loved ones at home, who will be the special feature this Sunday evening at Toronto's Maple Leaf Gardens.

the Royal Alexandra. Michael Strong, Betty Field, Shepperd Strudwick and Harold Gary will bring Miller's compelling drama vividly to life. The playwright has staged this production himself.

COMEBACK

Anthony Newley, who last appeared at O'Keefe Center in, Roar of the Greasepaint, Smell of the Crowd, returns to the theater to perform with himself as star for one week commencing December 1st. He will be seen in a variety concert which also will feature the talents of Carnival and the Ace Trucking Company.

SECOND SEASON

Theater Passe-Muraille has opened its second season with Memories for My Brother, writeen and directed by John Palmer.

One review states: "In its sweep it touches and sometimes topples the insanity of war, the hypocricy of politics, the complex plainful joy of human relationships and the bitter lack of direction of youth." The play is being performed at 11 Trinity Square, through this coming Sunday.

This season's first production is the fantasy play, The Dog and the Stone, directed by David Kemp.

Susan Douglas Rubes is producer and artistic director of the Young People's Theater.

EXCELLENT CAST

Producer Robert Whitehead has assembled an excellent cast for Arthur Miller's The Price, now running a four-week-engagement at

REMEMBER HIM?-Rudolph Valentino, the Latin lover of lovers of the silent screen whose demise in 1926 at the age of 31 still moves our present day grandmother. A legend, Valentino through hearsay is not unfamiliar to today's youth. Next Thursday one of the late star's most famous films, Son of the Sheik, will be presented, among others, at Toronto's York Public Library.

THEATER IN TORONTO

DOG AND THE STONE: FASCINATING

The Dog and the Stone, the latest Young People's Theater production at Toronto's Colonnade, centers upon a dog that finds a wishing stone. And how I wish I could have wished on that wishing stone! Because then I'd have wished I were a little girl being enthralled by today's presentation of stories.

Once upon a time when I was maybe six or seven, it was an event when teacher read us a story with emotion. Now, though, it's different. These stories have become plays--original--with audience participation.

And you should see these youngsters! Smart. Carried away, they tell the performers what to do, they direct the entire show. And everybody loves it.

Just as they were crazy about the dog Scrabby (Harro Maskow) who at first was reluctant to show the stone he found to his master, Sandy (Heath Lambert). Finally he did. Then the plot began.

The stone was forfeited from a magician who, learning his lesson about not mishandling it, tried to retrieve it. As Frank, the policeman and magician (all three parts played by Adrian Pecknold), and explained by the magician's daughter (Mary Barton), the wishing stone could only be effective again if the wishing were not trivial.

Until one reached that point, the shenanigans that ensued, aided and abetted by the young audience, were an ear splitting delight.

Interestingly, a small three-year-old cried whenever Scrabby barked--which made it all the more realistic.

THERE'S A FORTUNE IN REAL ESTATE

The Canadian Property Managers Association offer a unique course designed for the man who wants to start with about $1,000. A distinguished group of Canadian real estate specialists, notably a lawyer, a municipal assessor, an accountant, a mortgage financier, a land surveyor and others have been gathered together to show how to appraise, to finance and how to compound small holdings into huge property blocks. Many papers that come with real estate such as the Sheriff's Fee Certificate are explained. Many documents are given out during the course. You will learn how to evaluate properties and the many ways to generate capital.

These courses have run for many years in Ottawa and now you can get a complete transcript and permanent written record of everything said there. This ten week diploma course costs only $85. With each lecture relevant material is given out. This includes special leases, formal offers, mortgages and statutes. Approved by the Federal Government for Tax deduction of entire tuition.

LECTURE COURSE STARTS NOV. 17 — CALL TONIGHT

HUMAN RELATIONS

SECOND MARRIAGE

DR. ROSE N. FRANZBLAU

QUESTION: I am a widow, 54, going with a widower, 56, for the past 2 1/2 years. We get along very well, and he now feels it is time to get married. I would like that very much, but for one thing.

I have two children at home, ages 23 and 32. My friend also has a son of 19. We all feel that if we move together it won't work out too well.

My children have decided that I should get married, and that they will stay on in the apartment we live in. My friend's son would live with us.

My problem is that I can't leave my sons, even though they are both grown.

ANSWER: When a first marriage that is ended by the death of a mate has been a good and loving one, the chances for an equally good remarriage are excellent.

At first there may be some guilt about loving another after having professed such great and lasting love for the one who has departed. But these feelings are only fleeting, because the survivor knows that it was a beautiful and good relationship. Not only did she derive happiness from it, but she gave great happiness to the loved one while he lived. She therefore feels free to enter into a loving relationship again, because she senses that a remarriage is really a great compliment to the first marriage.

People who mourn too long and say that they could never relate in love to another sometimes do so out of guilt. They may not have shown enough mindfulness and consideration of the mate while he was alive. Also, a remarriage may represent to them a continuation of the tensions and hostility present in the first marriage.

Then there are some who feel liberated, now that the mate has died, from the responsabilities of marriage which they found annoying and objectionable. These unacceptable aspects of marriage could cover anything from marital sex, the obligation of being loyal and faithful to one person, or having to wait on the mate and run the household to suit his needs.

Sometimes this happens with men as well as women. They may lead an active social life and even date one person exclusively for a period of time, saying that they hope to marry in time. But as time goes on the excuses or reasons given for postponing marriage become weaker and less convincing. Soon the other feels that the time has run out.

In some ways, it appears as if there has been a reversal of roles in your family relationship. Your own sons have voiced their approval of your marriage to this man. But you feel you are deserting your sons, who stood by you in your time of need. The fact that your friend's son would live with you, while your own sons would not, makes you feel that your own family is getting the worst of the deal.

In a remarriage where the children of each of the pair are young and still in the process of growing up, there are bound to be some problems during the period of adjustment. But where the couple really care for each other, these difficulties are worked out and resolved, in time. In the case of grown children who are really old enough to be on their own, a move together into one household makes for rivalry and competition that cannot easily be resolved.

By their approval of this marriage, your sons have given you their greatest gift of love. They are indicating that they are now ready to operate on their own, which they may have delayed doing until now because of their concern for you. Your dependency on them has fostered and prolonged their dependency on you, and may have kept them from venturing forth.

To use them as your reason for not getting married would be grossly unfair to them. It would create a sence of guilt in them, and a compensatory hostility to you for not letting go of them. If you love this man and really want to get married, a good and lasting relationship with him would bring you happiness and give your sons the freedom to achieve total manhood.

You must move away from them, if they are to move foward and achieve this level of emotional maturity.

Recipe for the week

CHOCOLATE OATMEAL DROPS

1/2 cup (1 stick) butter or kosher margarine
1 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup granulated sugar
1 egg
4 tblsps. chocolate syrup
2 cup sifted flour
1/2 tsp. baking soda
1/2 tsp. salt
1/2 cup dairy sour cream
1/4 cup milk
1/2 cup chopped walnuts
1 cup uncooked oats
Walnut halves

In a bowl, cream the butter and sugars until light and fluffy; add egg, beating well. Blend in chocolate syrup. Sift the flour, soda and salt together; stir half the flour mixture into chocolate mixture. Add sour cream and milk, mixing well. Add remaining flour mixture. Stir in nuts and oats. Drop by rounded teaspoonfuls onto greased baking sheets two inches apart. Top each with a walnut half. Bake in a moderate oven (350 deg.) 12 to 15 minutes, until firm around the edges. Remove to racks to cool. Yield: approximately 6 dozens.

PAPAS ALL ALIKE

by Ruthie

As mothers why do husbands make you feel so inadequate sometimes? You know, I'd never breathe this. Only, in conversation with friends, I notice they have the same troubles. There must be some kind of mental telepathy among the fathers.

* * * *

When the kids are babies, Papa doesn't go near you with a ten-foot pole; he leaves you alone. After all, when they have colic, when they have the mumps, when they need their tonsils out, when they only have drippy noses -- who'll be up all night? Papa? A nekhtiger tug (yesterday's day). You're the one who stays awake so you could give the antibiotics on time.

So because you're nurse, the children squalk. I can't say I blame them when they have to take those ikhy medicines.

But the irony is, Papa is the hero. Because, wise guy, in sympathy he'll buy the toys, bring the ice cream, tell them jokes -- and disappear when you need real help like, maybe, holding them down if they need an enema.

* * * *

Then the children are ready for school. Public school?

"What!" Papa is blowing his stack. "After taking them to shool every Shabbos, you think I want to change the atmosphere?"

So it's a parochial school of his choice, which is fine with you. Only, except for paying the bills, Papa thinks that's the end of his obligation.

For instance, "Coming with me to the PTA meeting tonight?"

"What for? One representative in the family isn't enough? Anyway who wants to sit with a bunch of hens."

But you don't give up so readily. "Aren't you interested in your child's progress? An eminent psychologist will talk."

"Nu, you go and tell me what he says."

A brayra (choice)?

Then comes the report card. His chest swells with pride because it's so good. "A chip off the old block."

But let there be one flunk! Then it's your offspring; brains like yours; a kotzen moiyekh (cat's brains). "Aren't you around to see he does his homework?"

Familiar scene? And till doomsday we women won't come up with the right, scathing answer. Though we ought to get credit for trying.

* * * *

The youngsters, barukh hashem (thank the Lord), become adolescents.

You think you'll breathe easier; the contagious illnesses are over. Well, you're heading for a new crisis.

Like, "Mother," it's not Mommy but the formal form said in full teenage dignity, "I'm going on fifteen. All my friends date. It's only a synagogue dance."

After days and days of persistence, you're about ready to relent. You figure, you have good children, they discuss vital problems openly, if the event is in a place of worship then it couldn't pose a headache. And finally, you have to begin cutting the apron strings.

* * * *

But Papa! You're forgetting Papa. "What! A date! At that age!" Turning to me accusingly, "Du makhst zay kollya (you're spoiling them). Well, I put my foot down. No dates till they're eighteen."

Chimes in an older one, "Daddy, we don't live in ancient times when you were young. And kids are more sophisticated today."

A wail from the subject under discussion: "It's only a shool party. What's all the fuss? And anyway, I know how to take care of myself."

I start getting cramps. Somehow I know I'll wind up in the middle. But I timidly venture, "After all, she's got to grow up. We've given our children a good sense of morals." And here I become mad, "You think all boys are as you were at that age?"

"Aha," my Better Half pounces, "In kahoots. Go against me. Okay, raise them your way. But don't run complaining if you don't like something."

With this he absolves himself from all responsibility. He mutters, "It'll be your fault."

Icker (result): Nothing happens and we're as normal as the next family.
